

People

weekly

MARCH 12, 2001

Power Points

Diamonds are a girl's best friend—but while that pricey ice is nice, stars including Jenna Elfman, Claire Forlani and Wilona Ryder are finding diamond-shaped patterns equally fun to flaunt. Current updates on age-old argyle "reflect that classic, preppy feeling," says Barbara Benenson, creative director of knitwear maker White & Warren, which features the look. Making their points in sleeky leather or silk—like the Stella McCartney Chloé number Elfman sported at a movie premiere—diamond-printed duds "reinvent something traditional," adds New York City stylist Danna Weiss, "but with a slight edge for a younger look." Another fan, JAG's Catherine Bell, calls the pattern "very geometric, which makes it fun and kind of funky."

To avoid looking like a harlequin, though, choose your diamonds' size with care. "Take into consideration what is appropriate for your height and body type," advises Benenson. "Wearing anything too bold sends a glaring message." In other words, leave huge diamonds where they belong—on your finger. with Samantha McIntyre in New York City

"reinvent something traditional," adds New York City stylist Danna Weiss, "but with a slight edge for a younger look."

Diamond district: 1. Catherine Bell 2. Jenna Elfman 3. Wilona Ryder 4. Spice Girl Emma Bunton 5. Claire Forlani

StyleWatch

by Samantha Miller